

regeneration during the Old Testament period. Theologically speaking, we have discovered that the Old Testament doctrine of depravity, with its ontological, epistemological and ethical implications, necessitates the reality of regeneration during the Old Testament period, especially in view of the Old Testament assertions themselves as respect Old Testament believers when compared with New Testament assertions concerning regenerate New Testament believers. Thus we are pressed to the conviction that Old Testament believers were regenerate.